UK Census Dates 1801-2011

The UK Census has been taken every 10 years since the first one was taken in 1801, the only exception being 1941. Prior to 1841 the census was basically a head count and, in general, no names were recorded. The 100 year Data Protection rule applies to any census but, on occasion, the census is provided slightly earlier but with sensitive information redacted.

The dates when the census was taken are shown in the following table – in general the details recorded should have been of people present at each dwelling at midnight at the end of this day, although in later years the rules were clarified to include those such as night shift workers, who returned to the dwelling the following morning, having not been counted elsewhere.

No census was held in 1941 because of the Second World War but a “mini-census” was held on 29th September 1939 so that everybody could be issued with a National Identity Card (National Registration Act 1939). This now available from Ancestry and Find My Past but with information on living persons redacted.

Censuses taken from 1951 onwards will not be available to the public.
